Abstract

The Dorling Kindersley Children's Illustrated Dictionary is specifically aimed at children of seven years and up, an age when children are becoming increasingly independent readers and writers and when a dictionary can be a valuable companion.

Words and pictures

Unlike many other dictionaries, The Children's Illustrated Dictionary is not just about words-it also contains pictures. Children today are used to information being presented in a visual form through television, movies, and computers, and are skilled readers of images. As a result, they require books to be increasingly visually sophisticated.

The colorful photographs and illustrations in this dictionary are fresh, exciting, and highly relevant to children's interests and concerns. These images will help to draw young readers into the book; they also work with the text to give clear and concise definitions.

Vital skills for readers and writers

Using a dictionary can teach children many useful skills. One of the most important is the ability to locate information that is organized in alphabetical order. Once acquired, this skill will enable them to use many other reference books, from telephone directories to encyclopedias, that are organized along the same principle. The clear design and layout of this dictionary make it easy for children to learn how to look things up.

The Children's Illustrated Dictionary can also help to widen vocabulary and improve spelling. Young readers and writers can find out for themselves what an unfamiliar word means or check any spellings about which they are unsure.

In addition, this book will help children develop their awareness of words and the relationships between them. An introductory section explains the concept of parts of speech, such as nouns and verbs, that are also listed under each entry in the dictionary. The final section looks at word beginnings and endings, spelling patterns, and common abbreviations.

A dictionary with a difference

A unique feature of this dictionary is the 26 full-page entries, where words and pictures are grouped by theme.
 Browsing through these word collections, on subjects as diverse as costumes and time, children will enjoy recognizing known words and concepts and discovering new vocabulary and information. These pages offer many opportunities for discussion and provide the basis for further exploration of a wide range of topics and themes.

All about words

In every sentence that we speak or write, there are several types of word. They are called "parts of speech." Each of them has its own name and its own job to do in the sentence. In this dictionary, each word entry has its part of speech printed below it in italic type. The parts of speech that are labeled in the dictionary (verbs, adverbs, adjectives, interjections, prepositions, and nouns) are explained on these two pages.

They were both very angry.

Being verbs

Being words, such as am, is, are, was, and were, all come from the verb to be. They link someone or something with the words that describe them.

Helping verbs

Verbs such as have, be, will, must, may, and do, are sometimes used with other verbs in a sentence. They show how possible or necessary it is that an action takes place. Helping verbs can also be used to show a verb's tense.

Verb tenses

The form of a verb shows whether the action it describes takes place in the present, the past, or the future. This is called the verb's tense. When a verb, such as hang, appears

The second line of the entry shows how the verb is written in three different tensesthe present, the continuous present, and the past tense. These tenses are used like this:

Present tense:
She hangs up her T-shirt.
Continuous present tense: She is hanging up her T-shirt.

Past tense:
She hung up her T-shirt.

Adverbs

An adverb is a word that gives more information about a verb, an adjective, or another adverb. Adverbs can tell us how, when, where, how often, or how much. Slowly, yesterday, upward, and very are all adverbs. Many adverbs end with the letters "ly."

These newspapers are all published daily.

They played happily with the balloon.

Nouns

A noun is a word that names a thing, a person, or a place. Cat, teacher, spoon, and city are all nouns. Nouns do not have to be things that you can see-words like truth and geography are also nouns.

They often went to the café for a snack.

The present came in a round box tied with ribbon.

Adjectives

An adjective is a word that is used to describe a noun. Fat, yellow, sticky, dark, and hairy are all adjectives.

The car was big, red, and shiny.
A tall, green, prickly cactus.

Comparatives and superlatives

If you want to compare a person or thing with another, you often use an adjective in the comparative or superlative form. Taller, easier, better, and quicker are comparatives. Tallest, easiest, best, and quickest are superlatives. Comparatives either end with the letters "-er," or include the word "more."
Superlatives either end with the letters "-est" or include the word "most."

Adjective: This ball is big.

Comparative: This ball is bigger.

Superlative:
This ball is the biggest.

Interjections

Interjections are words such as hello and goodbye that can be used on their own, without being part of a full sentence. Exclamations, such as Oh! and Ouch!, are also interjections.

Conjunctions

Conjunctions are words such as and, but, and of, that are used to join parts of sentences together.

Prepositions
Prepositions, such as in, with, behind, and on, show how one person or thing relates to another.

Guide word

Use the guide word at the top of the page to help you find the page a word is on. The left-hand guide word, rabbi, tells you that this is the first word on the page.

New letter section

Each new letter section starts with a big letter, like this $\mathbf{R}$.

Alphabet

Use the alphabet running down the side of the page to help you find your place in the dictionary. The highlighted letter tells you that you are in the $\mathbf{R}$ section.

Alphabetical order

The headwords in this dictionary are listed in alphabetical orderthe same order as the letters of the alphabet. Words that begin with A are grouped at the start of the dictionary, followed by B words, and so on up to Z . Where several words start with the same letter, the second

How to use this dictionary

Read the information on these two pages to find out how to get the most from your dictionary. Most pages in the book look like the double page from the letter $\mathbf{R}$ section shown below. There are also 26 full-page entries in the dictionary that provide a whole page of pictures and vocabulary on a theme. The page shown here is about cars.

Headword

This is the word you are looking up. The headword is printed in heavy, black letters at the start of the entry. The definition underneath explains what the headword means.

Guide word

The right-hand guide word, rate, tells you that this is the last word on this page.
letters of the words are used to decide which comes first. So cat comes before cot, because A comes before $\mathbf{O}$ in the alphabet. If words start with the same two letters, then the third letter decides the order. So radius comes before raft, because $\mathbf{D}$ comes before $\mathbf{F}$.

Word box

Families of linked words are enclosed in a box. All the words in this box start with the same word, rain.

Pictures

The photos and illustrations show you exactly what things look like and help to define the headwords.

Full-page entries

All the pictures and labels on a full-page entry are linked to the main headword. This page shows different car types, with their various parts labeled.

How the entries work

Rarer means "more rare" and rarest means "the most rare."

Word building

The charts on this page show how you can take one word and build a new one from it by adding a group of letters called a prefix or a suffix. Prefixes, such as dis-, un-, or mes-, are joined to the front of a word. They are often used to change a word to its opposite. For example, adding the prefix in- turns visible into invisible. Suffixes, such as -furl, -ism, or -ment, are joined to the end of a word. They are often used to change a word from one part of speech to another. For example, adding the suffix -er turns the verb teach into the noun teacher. These charts show some common prefixes and suffixes.
